Agenda Item: The Russia-Ukraine War and the Use of Weapons in International Law

China is in East Asia and is governed by a single-party regime by the Communist Party of China. It's the second most populous country in the world with a lifespan of approximately 1.4 billion, the third largest in terms of land area with 9.6 million km², and the 3rd or 4th largest in terms of total area. 22 states, 5 autonomous regions, it is dominated by 4 directly governed cities and the special administrative centers of Hong Kong and Macau, and has sovereignty claims over Taiwan.

The importance of the war between Russia and Ukraine is very high because the war between Ukraine and Russia has great meaning and importance for all states politically because there are great conflicts between and behind these two countries (NATO, 2023). These conflicts have great meaning in history and this war is not only political, historical, and also economic (Averre, 2016). It is important from a political point of view, but it is not limited to these only, because of all the energy, water, oil, and many other materials, everything in this war, and we will explain how we can prevent all these wars in China.

As China, we emphasize neutrality and advocate for a peaceful resolution to the Russia-Ukraine war through dialogue and diplomacy. We support respecting the sovereignty and territorial integrity of all nations while opposing the use of force or weapons that escalate conflicts. Our policy aligns with promoting global stability and prioritizing solutions under international law to safeguard peace and security.
