Promoting Gender Equality in the Digital Age

Since sustainable development is a fundamental part of the policy-making process of Germany, men and women are accepted as central in political and national planning. However, it is not only a matter of justice, but also a strategy to have inclusive and effective programs in which women in abundance are actively involved in decision-making activities. Along with conventional gender equality, we are also embracing the digital world, which is synonymous with development, inventions and universality of social justice. The digital divide between the genders is really a bad round after the world's development which requires immediate solution.

Internationally, Germany has demonstrated its commitment by actively supporting UN Women's efforts to increase women's participation in political processes. At the national level, Germany has advocated for a gender-balanced federal civil service through legislation such as the Federal Equality Act. Germany has also been a partner in UN Women's global initiatives to define a smart agenda to harness the power of technology for women's empowerment.

Germany strives to include different views in policy making and promotes active part of women in governance. The issue of gender equality is of paramount importance in digital divide agenda, which stipulates equal access to digital opportunities for all, since the digital age is considered a transformative phenomenon. The fact that the gender that is digitally empowered is crucial to the development of the society, Germany has the programs and policies geared towards the digital inclusion of women. By making these issues a priority, Germany underlines its commitment to promoting inclusive, equitable and technologically developed societies.

Lastly, we point out that in both spheres of governance and the digital environment Germany is set to be a leader in gender equality. Our active integration into UN Women's activities and the implementation of the already established actions is aimed at fostering the development of such a global environment where women in decision making and in the digital age are equal with respect to the opportunities. Through extended cooperation of the UN women committee, we anticipate a world of tomorrow where integrated policies and digital empowerment produces a fair and equitable community for the future generation.

In the pursuit of global gender equality, nations around the world are recognizing the essential role women play in governance and national planning. Women's empowerment is not just a national agenda, but a collective commitment to building inclusive societies that thrive on diverse perspectives. In this context, Germany is committed to promoting women's active participation in decision-making, both domestically and globally.

Germany acknowledges that women's participation is essential for sound and inclusive decision-making and recognizes the central role of women in governance and national planning. As a nation with a commitment to gender equality, Germany has been actively implementing policies in support of women's leadership. In particular, the introduction of female quotas for corporate boards aims to achieve gender balance in leadership. Complementary policies underscore our commitment to promoting women's active participation in both their professional and family lives, including work-life balance initiatives such as flexible working hours and parental leave.
