

Country: Finland

Committee: UNDP

Agenda: Climate Crisis and Resilience

Most of the behaviors we do as humans today are very harmful to nature. These damages can sometimes grow so large that climate crisis begins. In early 2020, the climate crisis in Finland had become a real problem.

Towards February 2020's young Finnish people protested. But it doesn't seem to work very well. Noticing this situation, the older Finlanders held a protest together with the young. This time they were able to attract the attention of government on this issue. In 2021-2022, Emma Kari, the Finnish Minister of Environment and Climate Change, worked hard to prevent the climate crisis. In addition, Finland's Environment and Climate Change Minister Emma Kari aimed to achieve net zero in 2025 and negative zero emissions in 2045, and we are really close to these targets. In addition, Kai Mykkänen, the Finnish Environment and Climate Change Minister, is implementing the goals to prevent the climate crisis that Emma Kari is or plans to do.

As Finland, we really care about this issue and compared to 2020, our development makes us very proud.