

COMMITTEE:WIPO

TOPIC:Protecting Young Entrepreneurs and Their Inventions through Intellectual Property Rights

South Korea's history has been shaped by foreign influences, including Japan's control from 1910 to 1945. After the Korean War (1950–1953), the country split into North and South, with the creation of the neutral zone. Over time, South Korea became a successful, democratic country known for its technology and culture. The country also protects young entrepreneurs' ideas through strong intellectual property laws, promoting innovation and supporting the growth of its tech and creative businesses.

South Korea has a strong history of protecting young entrepreneurs through intellectual property rights. Since the late 20th century The country's strict laws have protected inventions, encouraging young inventors to benefit from their ideas. This protection has played a key role in supporting South Korea's economic growth. Other countries have helped south korea shape its intellectual property system. And trade relationships particularly with the united states of america and with the european union. This has led to south korea strengthening its intellectual property laws system,supporting entrepreneurs and protecting their inventions.in the past the united nations have taken many international acts including The Agreement on Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) , the WIPO Development Agenda . these resolutions have guided south korea into building a stronger intellectual property system

South Korea is actively supporting entrepreneurs and their inventions through strong intellectual property laws . South Korea also offers many programs to help entrepreneurs . To make protecting entrepreneurs easier, South Korea could align with countries like the United States, Japan, Switzerland and European Union and NATO members.
