France, located in Western Europe, is a diverse nation with a population of approximately 67 million people. The country has a strong economy, driven by industries such as technology, agriculture, and manufacturing, and boasts a well-regarded education and healthcare system. With the rise of digital technology, France has become increasingly concerned about the growing issue of cyberbullying, particularly as young people spend more time online. The country's commitment to human rights and social justice drives its efforts to address online harassment and protect its citizens in the digital space.

Cyberbullying has become a global issue, affecting individuals, especially youth, through social media and other online platforms. France has taken significant steps to address this issue, including the 2019 law aimed at combating online harassment. On the international stage, France actively supports initiatives within the European Union and the United Nations to combat cyberbullying and promote online safety. The United Nations has passed resolutions urging member states to strengthen their efforts to prevent online violence, highlighting the need for global cooperation.

France's approach to cyberbullying includes strict legal measures, public awareness campaigns, and international collaboration. Domestically, France enforces laws that hold cyberbullies accountable and provides support for victims. France believes that international cooperation is crucial to combat cyberbullying, advocating for stronger regulations for tech companies and greater support for victims worldwide. France expects the committee to work towards developing international standards and collaborative solutions to ensure the digital world remains safe for everyone.
